Regan's Plan a Starting Point For Bargaining on U.S. Taxes

WASHINGTON - Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan's tax proposal is being regarded here as less a plan for enactment than a bargaining chip in what is certain to be a prolonged battle with Congress and special-interest groups over changes in the nation's tax

Mr. Weinberger, often considered one of the Reagan administration's most hawkish members because of his support for large defense spending increases, out-lined his views in a speech to the National Press Club.

He drew distinctions with other administratioo officials, chiefly Secretary of State George P. Shultz. although Mr. Shultz was oever mentioned by oame.

Mr. Shultz, who has publicly acknowledged the split with Mr. Weinberger, backed the troop deployment while the defense secretary opposed it.

Mr. Weinberger said "recent history has proven that we cannot assume unilaterally the role of the world's defender."

Echoing a lesson learned by military leaders after the Vietnam War, Mr. Weinberger said U.S. troops should only be committed with strong support from the U.S. publie and in situations when all else has failed.

"We have learned that there are limits to how much of our spirit and blood and treasure we can afford to forfeit in meeting our responsibility to keep peace and free-dom," Mr. Weinberger said.

"So while we may and should offer substantial amounts of economic and military assistance to our allies in their time of need, and help them maintain forces to deter attacks against them, usually we cannot substitute our troops or our will for theirs." "We cannot assume for other sovereign nations the responsibility to defend their territory, without their strong invitation, when our own freedom is not threatened," Mr. Weinberger said.

He outlined criteria for deciding whether to use U.S. troops:

• The occusion should be "deemed vital to our national interest or that of our allies."

• The troops should go in "with the clear intention of winning." • "We should have clearly defined political and military objec-

Mr. Weinberger said there was increasing Soviet aid to leftists in Central America and said if it continued, "we will clearly need more economic and military assistance and training to help those who want democracy."

"The president will not allow our military forces to creep, or be drawn gradually, into a combat role in Central America or any other place in the world." he said.

Congress, meanwhile, is clearly reluctant to negotiate tax changes in a vacuum. The budget and its enormous deficits weigh more on Congress now than changing the tax code.

Many congressmen, lobbyists and other players in fashioning the nation's tax system consider the reasury's proposal too complex, too all-encompassing, and too threatening to special interests for Congress to swallow. Instead, the proposal is expected to provide the stage for a nadonal debate stretching through next year.

Prospects for the proposal's survival intact are "zero," said Richard W. Rahm, an economist and lobbyist for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, a business organization and usually an ally of Mr. Reagan. The struggle for the votes of the 53 Republican senators reflected the race's importance. The majority leader, one of the most powerful figures in Washington, will have a major hand in shaping the legislative record of the 99th Congress, to convene in January.

The majority leader decides what bills to call up for action and what measures are set aside. As party leader he is expected to keep mem-bers bappy and unified so they vote in bloc, to seek mutually advantageous compromises with the Democratic-led House and to help enact the president's programs, Senator Alan K. The other candidates for majority leader — Senators James A. McClure of Idaho, Pete V. Domenici of New Mexico and Richard Lugar of Indiana --- were eliminated in that order.

Among Senator Lugar's prob-lems were that his election would eliminate bim from the lineap for the chairmanship of the Foreign Relations Committee, opening the way for a possible struggle between a conservative. Allies Hope Arms Talks Kill U.S. Space Weapon

By Joseph Fitchett International Herald Tribune

PARIS --- As the Reagan administration prepares for arms-control talks with the Soviet Union early next year, a cross section of West European politicians, officials and strategists hopes that the negotiations will scuttle the U.S. plan for a space-based defense system. European views, as expressed by embers of the parhaments of the NATO countries at a recent conference in Brussels, converge on a sin-gle idea: President Ronald Reagan should use his post-election prestige to try to set a ban on weapons in space, including those being developed to destroy Soviet nuclear

A White House spokesman confirmed Tuesday that U.S. plans for the space-based missile defense, which is formally known as the Strategic Defense Initiative, would be on the bargaining table.

The willingness to discuss this class of weapon will be welcomed by U.S. allies. Many think that the futuristic defense will consume money and never work. Others worry that it will work, pushing the United States into perhaps dangerous isolation behind its high-technology shield.

In Potential Landmark Ruling, Dutch High Court Orders Review of Euthanasia Case

By Jo Thomas New York Times Service

THE HAGUE - The Netherlands Supreme Court has asked an appeals court to take another look at the case of a doctor who gave a fatal dose of curare, a powerful muscle-relaxing drug, to an elderly patient who had begged to die. Many bere said the request could result to a landmark decision on the issue of enthanasia.

EC Aides Fail to Agree on New Entries

BRUSSELS (Reuters) — The foreign ministers of the European Community appeared Wednesday to have accepted the idea that they cannot agree on key terms for Spanish and Portuguese entry into the Et and were certain to pass the problems over to Monday's summit meeting in Dublin, diplomats said.

Spanish and Portuguese ministers have been waiting to start a final round of entry negotiations with the community ministers. However, only the Irish foreign minister, who is the meeting's chairman, and the French minister for European affairs were present here when community ministers resumed their meeting Wednesday. The other eight member nations were represented by more junior ministers.

Community leaders meeting in Dublin are expected to discuss the major problems in the negotiations with Spain, particularly Italy's concern that proposals to curb surplus wine production would further reduce the incomes of its farmers. Spain and Portugal are scheduled to join the EC in 1986. Ministers are under pressure to complete negotiations with the two countries by the end of this year to allow time for member parliaments to ratify the entry treaties.

Church Names Replacement for Tutu

JOHANNESBURG (AP) - The Reverend Beyers Naude, a white opponent of racial segregation who has been banned twice by the South African government, has been asked to replace Bishop Desmond Tunt as head of the South African Council of Churches.

Mr. Naude, whose latest banning order was lifted in September, said Wednesday that he would reply in a few days to the council's request that he become acting general secretary of the council for two years. Bishop Tutu, the black activist who was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize last nonth, has been named the Anglican bishop of Johannesburg.

The executive committee of the council, whose member churches represent 12 million people, decided Tuesday night to ask Mr. Naude, 69, to head the council for two years while a special committee reviews the

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Libyan leader, Colonel Moamer Qadhafi, has denied that Libyan troops remain in Chad in violation of a withdrawal agreement with France and referred to President Ronald Reagan and Prime Minister Shimon Peres of Israel as "terrorists."

In an interview Tuesday with ABC television, Colonel Qadhafi said he was misunderstood in the United States. He said he wanted to "create a new world of peace, of happiness, of love, between all the peoples in the world." He added: "I think maybe public opinion in the United States of America does not understand me well." He said that Mr. Reagan and Mr.

Peres were "terrorists — and criminals of war."

Two weeks ago, U.S. intelligence reports quoted in several newspapers said about 3,000 Libyan troops remained in northern Chad despite a Sept. 16 agreement with France to pull out. The report occurred after the French government had announced that troops of both countries had been removed. He said "all of the Libyan troops" had been withdrawn from Chad and instead said that France has kept 300 French soldiers in Chad. "I stick to my word," Colonel Qadhafi said.

Workers' Taxes Cut in Greek Budget

ATHENS (Renters) - Greece's Socialist government, which faces an election next year, announced a 1985 budget Wednesday that will cut workers' taxes but increase spending on health and education.

Planned changes in the income tax scale and new tax relief measures should raise workers' living standards by around 2 percent, according to Gerasimos Arsenis, the finance minister.

Mr. Arsenis said the tax changes would cost the government about 25 billion drachmas ($200 million), which it boped to recoup by cracking down on tax-dodgers and through higher taxes on cigarettes and foreign

White House to Delay Its Report on Alleged Soviet Arms Violations

By Bernard Gwertzman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - White House officials have announced that they will delay notil February the release of a report on purported Soviet arms-control violations that was scheduled to be made public

This means that the report, said to include up to 19 possible Soviet violations, will not be released before Secretary of State George P. Shultz meets with Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko in Geneva on Jan. 7 and 8.

But the White House officials. aware that they could be accused of trying to cover up the Soviet violations to improve the atmosphere for the meeting, denied such motives for the announcement Tues-day. They said that the study, which the Senate and House armed services committees had requested by Saturday, was oot complete. The White House is also required to send to Congress on Feb. 1 and Feb. 15 additional studies on Soviet compliance with previous armscontrol accords

Because of the multiple requests, a White House official said Tuesday, "It would appear that the most logical thing to do, and the most do-able thing, is to combine the Dec. I report with the other mandated congressional requests and to report in one rather comprehensive report in February."

Earlier, a Senate aide said the White House was under pressure from the State Department to delay the report because of the Geneva

But a White House official said, "Lest anyone think it is the State Department pressuring the White House, we would have more concern about the atmosphere heing poisoned once the negotiating pro-ing Sept. 28 with Mr. Gromyko. A Senate aide, who said he had direct knowledge of what was being prepared for the Saturday report, confirmed that it included as many as 19 purported Soviet violations.

According to the aide, among the purported violations under study are possible testing of anti-ballistic missiles, deployment of mobile ra-dars and further information that a phased-array radar near Krasnoyarsk is being deployed in violation of the 1972 and ballistic missile treaty. . He said that the Russians have

Reagan Sets Meetings

President Reagan pledged Tues-day to meet weekly with his armscontrol advisers to develop a strate-gy for U.S.-Soviet oegotiations, the Los Angeles Times reported from Washington.

The announcement seemed designed to counter published reports that earlier administration armscontrol proposals were developed with little guidance from, or understanding by, the president.
Officials said the announcement was also intended as a signal that the Reagan administration had dropped the idea of appointing an arms-control "czar."

The president is the czar," said a White House spokesman, Robert Sims. "That's what it boils down

Fire Behind This Smoke

Look at all the balls up in the air in Washington ... or are they trial balloons? ... or just smoke? The U.S. Treasury is proposing a vast tax reform plan. The Budget Office offers a list of spending cuts in popular programs. There is enough controversy for four more years and then some. But is this all the economic program President Reagan has in mind? nomie program President Reagan has in mind? These ideas are interesting, perhaps even meritorious, but they evade the central issue: how to curb the federal deficit. The tax plan is said to be "revenue neutral." If the Treasury's debatable estimates are correct, it will not bring in a dollar more in taxes. But more has to be raised. Even if Congress approved every cut on the Office of Management and Budget's list — about as likely as Mr. Reagan switching parties again — the deficit would still be a tormenting problem. What is still needed is restraint on the Pentagon.

Why all this budget maneuvering? It is always useful to test radical ideas in debate before the president submits his final proposals to Congress in January. He surely will not embrace everything the Treasury and the OMB suggest. But the extraordinary flow of leaks and announcements invites suspicion that something important is not being men-against making deficit reduction its top priority. Let Congress do it - and take the beat.

Introducing a simpler and fairer tax system would be difficult at any time, so strong are the vested interests in tax rates and loopboles. The Treasury's plan is riddled with good sense, but attempting reform now will be enormously complicated by the need for greater revenues. Tax reform and tax increases might be taken on together. But if a choice is necessary, America's economic welfare hangs on reducing the deficit. And that means raising revenues.

Of the $1,000 billion or so that the govern-ment spends each year, outlays for the mil-tary, Social Security and interest on the national debt take two-thirds. Interest is an obligation; it must be paid. Although defense and Social Security could be cut, the president holds them out of bounds. That leaves only a third of the budget subject to cutting, and much of that is politically sacred. When all the possible nondefense cuts have been made, it will still be necessary to tackle defense.

The deficits of Mr. Reagan's first term are the burden of his second. His firemen are preoccupied with smoke. What about the fire? - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Hailed Into World Court

The Reagan administration made a tactical error by contending legalistically that the In-ternational Court of Justice had no jurisdiction to hear Nicaragua's complaint of U.S. aggression. The World Court, built on a United Nations design, is essentially a political body. No other case having to do with the use of force or a threat to the peace has ever come before it; these have always been accepted as political questions, to be dealt with elsewhere. Given the David vs. Goliath aspect of this matter, however, it would have been only pru-dent to anticipate that the World Court might choose to hear the case. That it bas now done, purting the United States in the uncomfortable position of appearing reluctant to be brought before international justice.

This leaves the Reagan administration with two things to do. First, it should openly accept the political nature of the forum and stoutly defend U.S. national interests within it. The U.S. policy is not particularly popular even among friends in Western Europe, whose judges were among those rejecting the no-jurisdiction claim. Still, the United States is not without a serious case. It can argue in The Hague, as it has argued at the United Nations and in other forums, that the respect for law contemplated by the UN Charter is a two-way street: Nicaragua must be expected to stop its depredations against neighbors if the United States is expected to halt measures that it insists it takes for collective self-defense. Surely the Reagan administration has enough confidence in its policy to carry it to The Hague.

Second, something further has to be done about the CIA operations that are at the beart of Nicaragua's complaint: They should be stopped, finally and permanently. The purpose is not to get right with the World Court but to lift a burden from U.S. policy. Nicaragua, scene of so many past U.S. interventions, is not the right place to sustain this one is not the right place to sustain this one. Support of the contras gets in the way of other means — aid and diplomacy — available to Washington to fulfill obligations to friends in Central America and shift the struggle in the region toward more peaceful channels.

Committed as it is, the Reagan administration may not be ready to end a program for which it is being stung in world opinion. But there are other reasons to end it. As it happens, the odds are strongly against congressional renewal of the requisite funding. A mooting of the case by this means would be a good idea.

Japan: Close Aerial Encounters

In the past few weeks there have been an alarmingly high number of Soviet reconnais-sance bombers coming close to and in a few cases trespassing in Japan's airspace. The Air Self-Defense Force responds by ordering its jet fighter units to intercept the possible intrudwere mobilized to intercept the bombers during the first of this month's two episodes.

[Soviet] long-range maritime reconnaissance and/or attack planes are deployed not only for exercises of a routine nature but also for reinforcement of aircraft units stationed in such overseas bases as the ones at Vietnam's Cam Ranh Bay. The Soviet Union has access to the strategically important naval and air bases in that country, from which maritime interdicrion operations could be launched in time of a crisis in the Indian Ocean or the Gulf region.

With at least six dozen supersonic Backfire bombers based in Siberia and a dozen or so in Vietnam, there are a variety of approach paths toward the Japanese islands. This and other factors call for steps to introduce sophisticated high-performance interceptor fighters such as the F-15, which some ASDF units have started using, and to develop a yet more advanced tactical fighter plane, which is now under way.

Preparedness is required today to prevent any midair encounter close to Japan's vicinity from developing into a serious incident, and to meet possible air threats of tomorrow.

Words for 1985, Off the Wall

The first sure sign that the end of the year is approaching is the arrival of the Rand Corporation calendar. For the last 22 years the Santa Monica, California, think tank has put aside thinking about nuclear war long enough to cull a dozen provocative quotations from hither and you and afix one to each month. The quotations express "unconventional wisdom," in the words of Malcolm Palmatier, who oversees the project. We cheated and looked ahead. In March we found Bernard Brodie, who says: "In wars throughout history, events have generally proved the pre-hostilities calculations of both sides, victor as well as loser, to have been seriously wrong ... Our experimilitary decision-making warns us to appreciate bow imperfect is even the best we can do." In April, Sam Levenson speaks on behalf of maladjusted children: "If the founding fathers of this country had all been well-adjusted we would still be a British colony."

Edward R. Murrow enlightens June with the observation: "To produce change, unless it is imposed by tyranny, there must be a difference of opinion; there must be opposition; there must be pioneer thinking; there must be freedom to criticize; there must be the unremitting conflict and testing of ideas."

Then on to September, when children will go back to school and Edith Hamilton extols the pleasure of learning for its own sake: "To be able to be caught up in the world of thought - that is to be educated."

In even-numbered years November is the month for choosing political leaders. November gets next year off, but Machiavelli's words will keep: "The first impression that one gets of a ruler and of his brains is from seeing the men that be bas about him." And in December the words of Albert Finstein will be hanging over our desk: "Our time is distinguished by wonderful achievements in the fields of scientific understanding and the technical application of those insights. Who would not be obeered by this? But let us not forget that knowledge and skills alone cannot lead bumanity to a happy and dignified life. Humanity has every reason to place the proclaimers of high moral standards above the discoverers of objective truth."

"Somehow or other, the great Republic of the North has not been very successful in its dealings with the States of Central and South America. The United States is rather disposed to adopt a semi-paternal attitude towards the weaker neighbors which is not at all to the liking of the South American people. American diplomacy can scarcely have been tactful. for though former Secretary of State Elihu Root, in his recent South American tour, emphasized the desire of his nation to respect to the full the independence and the rights of the Southern Republics, no one acquainted with popular feeling in these various countries can doubt that deep distrust exists regarding the aims and policy of the United States."

1934: Gangster Nelson Found Dead CHICAGO - George "Baby Face" Nelson, who succeeded his slain leader, John Dillinger, as Public Enemy No. 1, was found dead [on Nov. 28] at Niles Center, Illinois, fifteen miles from the scene of the machine-gun battle in which he killed two Department of Justice operatives at Barrington, a Chicago suburb. Attorney General Homer S. Cummings announced that the gangster was shot by Special Agent Samuel O. Cowley before the latter was fatally wounded in the battle. The finding of the body culminated an intensive twenty-fourhour search for the former Dillinger lieutenant and triggerman. The killing of Nelson, which cost the lives of two Federal men to get one. brings the score in the grim contest between the Dillinger gang and the law to 9-9.

H AMBURG — To those who judge power by the size of military arsenals, the question of whether the United States is still a superpower will come as a surprise. During the past four years the United States has spent almost $1 trillion on defense, and its military strength. which has always placed it in the top bracket of the international list, has grown commensurately. The United States today is militarily stronger than for many years when there was no question of its status as a superpower.

So wby should there be doubt over its superpower status? The answer is that it takes more than military strength to qualify.

What distinguishes a superpower from the other actors on the world stage is willingness and ability to design and maintain a framework of international order that serves its own interests while accommodating the interests of the large majority of weaker countries. It is the commitment not only to its own well-being but also to that of the internanonal community as a whole. In this respect the Soviet Union has never been a superpower, and is unlikely to become one. It is true that Soviet leaders have long harbored the dream of a world shaped in their own ideological image, but thet is less a blueprint for international order than a wbolly unrealistic vision of a "socialist paradise." In practical terms the Soviet Union has no concept of international order and has done nothing to develop such a concept. Instead it has concentrated on shoring up its empire against outside influence and on demand-ing, from its neighbors and all others, respect ing, from its neighbors and all others, respect based on its size and power.

There was a time when America was a superpower in the true sense: confident not only in its strength but also in its ability to build, together with others, a world of shared duties and rights, and ready to carry the major burden in this enterprise. None of today's international organi-zations would have been created without this American readiness — from the United Nations to the International Monetary Fund, from the World Bank to the International Energy Agency.

By Christoph Bertram

But, judging by the current mood in the United States, those days are long gone. America's development aid to countries other than the ones judged to be of strategic interest in the Middle East and Central America has shrunk rapidly; a few weeks ago, David Rockefeller rightly called that "a pretty shabby performance."

High budget deficits are maintained without the slightest concern for the effects either on the developing countries or on America's more affluent partners. To the poor of the world, Washington preaches the virtues of the market economy, which is supposed to improve their lot and combat the pressures of population growth.

In the United Nations the Reagan administration has shown little understanding of the legiti-mate diversity of international society and instead has preferred a hectoring stance of "them and us." After the president's dismissive remarks a year ago in connection with the possible change of the site for the UN beadquarters—"We aren't asking anyone to leave but if they choose to leave goodbue"—can anyone assume that were leave, goodbye — can anyone assume that, were the United Nations being set up today, America would have the generosity and the commitment would nave the generosity and the commitment to invite the organization to New York?

The sad truth is thet America has given up the traditions it established after World War II, apparently not only without regrets but with a sigh of relief. Rather than accept the challenge of the state of formulating an international order that promises cooperation and stability for the 1990s, America prefers to pursue its interests alone. It is no longer a producer of international order.

As a European, one cannot, of course, point the finger accusingly at America alone for this sad state of affairs. It was probably always too much to expect that America could on its own maintain the spirit and the structures of internationalism that it could generate the necessary generosity and confidence without strong support from its Western partners and friends.

In fact, the decline of internationalism is as much to blame on American nationalism as on European provincialism. Europeans have absorbed their energies in quarreling with each other over narrow national advantages rather than providing, for an internationally minded America, a supportive partner. The people and the governments of Western Europe, who often find it so convenient to blame America, have enough reason for blaming themselves.

But that does not remove the sadness. We once had the chance, when the United States was combining strength with generosity, to build a world in which might did not impose right alone.

We are now back in a world in which the strong was the strong that the strong do what they want and the weak suffer what they must — in which the title of "superpower" is a measure of military strength alone.

It is true that the strong and the rich nations will cope much better in such a world than the weak and the poor. But it would be comforting if Americans, rather than embracing with apparent relief the return to earlier periods of international Darwinism. had at least a tinge of regret and, perhaps, a bad conscience as well.

Deficit: Conservatism Used to Mean Flinty Realism

TY / ASHINGTON - When some VV Homer comes to write an epic poem about the intellectual odyssey of American conservatism, he will want to dwell on an episode in Sidney, Ohio, in autumn 1984. There President Reagan, custodian of conservatism, speaking from the rear platform of a train, said: "My opponent Mr. Mondale offers a future of pessimism, fear and limits ... It is enough to curl your hair: Walter Mondale, that cad, was going around scaring the children with the thought that there are limits.

Time was when the proudest boast of conservatism was a flinty realism. It lnoked life in the face without flinching from the facts about the costs of things. No more.

Mr. Mondale was somewhat shaky on the subject of limits. Promising more "compassion" for the poor, and for lots of other folks, and promising to trim the deficit at the same time, be sounded like the will that François Rabelais left when he died in 1533: "I have nothing. I owe much. I leave the rest to the poor." But conservatives are supposed to be different. Mr. Reagan's statement in Sidney talked about the Republican future of "bope, confidence and growth."

The question today is about the third item: Will economic growth free Americans from "limits"?

Do not try to talk limitlessness to the Reagan aides who are aging rapidly as they toil at producing a bud-get. Their task is to do what Mr. Reagan wants done, within the limits (if you will pardon the word) he has decreed. We must back up in order to take a running jump into this subject.
In fiscal 1984, the year of the second Reagan landslide, federal revenues were almost the same share of GNP (18.7 percent) as in 1964 (18.4 percent), the year of the anti-Gold-water landslide. But federal outlays as a percentage of GNP have risen from 19.2 to 23.5. Mr. Reagan says that tax increases will not be part of his deficit-reduction plan. Do you want to know the plan?

Are you sitting down?
For fiscal 1986, Social Security ($200 billion) and defense ($284 billion) are to make up more than half the budget. Mr. Mondale forced Mr. Reagan to pledge (actually, to admit) that Social Security is untouchable. And Mr. Reagan wants his defense requests saluted, not touched.

Interest payments are not optional, and they are the fastest growing part of the budget. They are $154 billion. The Social Security, defense, interest total is thus $638 billion. The nice thing about a trillion-dollar budget is that it simplifies cal-culations: $638 billion is 63.8 percent of the budget, almost two-thirds. Mr. Reagan says the deficit, which is 5 percent of GNP, must shrink to 4 percent in fiscal 1986, 3 percent in 1987 and 2 percent in 1988. For that, non-defense and non-Social Security spending cuts must total $42 billion in fiscal 1986, $85 billion in 1987 and $110 billion in 1988. This must come from an initial target area of about $300 billion, more than one-third of which is Medicare or Medicaid.

Next summer 40 percent of the Republican senators (22 of the 53) will already be preparing for their 1986 re-election campaigns and will be in no mood to scorch the earth where social programs stand.

Furthermore, low-income support programs, which received a disproportionate share of the cuts voted in 1981, cannot be cut again. So to achieve the deficit-to-GNP relation-an attack incomparably more radical than anything attempted or even dreamed of in 1981. The list of programs that must be eliminated - in alphabetical order, starting with all agricultural programs, and Amtrak, and running through flood control, student loans and much else — fills many typewritten pages. Now remember, the "safety net" cuts are done. The programs on the achieve the deficit-to-GNP relation-ship that Mr. Reagan stipulates, programs that Republicans support.

So suppose Mr. Reagan sends such a list to Congress for execution. If I'l O'Neill is cunning and bitter - and be is both - he will urge Democrats to abstain from voting. The result will be that Republicans swat the budget, like a shuttlecock, 16 blocks back down Pennsylvania Avenue. If the programmatic consequences of Mr. Reagan's goals and limits are proposed to Congress or, as is more likely, are leaked, there will be a political fire storm. The resulting cinders will have to be sifted through a fine sieve to find even a charred remcant of President Reagan's influence on the budget process.

Deficit: Responsible Leadership, Please

N EW YORK — Without policy actions, the U.S. federal budget deficit could rise well past $260 billion by 1989. That would be nearly 5 percent of GNP. Interest would eat up more than a third of every federal dollar not earmarked for entitlements or other mandated spending.

To put this in historical perspec-tive, the projected interest cost of the federal debt in 1989 will be more than all federal expenditures in 1972. That just is not sustainable.

Such deficits inevitably would force an intensified clash between public and private credit markets. Deficits of 5 to 6 percent of GNP, as are now projected, would absorb a buge share of net private saving. Deficit-fueled interest rates would seriously barm export industries and discourage domestic investment. If there is not decisive action, the growing national debt will become a deep, divisive drag on the economy.

The problem with most of the current political rhetoric is that it ignores three fundamental truths: Not through growth alone: The United States cannot grow its way out of the deficits in an orderly and noninflationary fashion. A substan-tial portion of future deficits is structural — in other words, mandated spending will outpace revenues in the years ahead, even with noninflation-ary growth. Structural deficits cannot be cured by economic growth alone.

According to a recent analysis by the Congressional Budget Office, if, beginning in October 1984, economie growth was 1-percent higher than projected by the office, this would reduce the deficit by only $9 billion in fiscal year 1985 and by $47 billion in fiscal 1987. These results would not come close to accomplishing the job that is required. Moreover, both the administration and the CBO's current projections already assume relatively vigorous real growth rates. Significant gains have been made during the welcome, real and strong economic recovery of the past two years. Much progress has been achieved in increasing employment, reducing inflation and strengthening investment, But there have been some significant costs. We find ourselves By Donald C. Platten butter" pattern and, once again, we are paying for neither. Americans must recognize that much of our future prosperity rides on how seriously we are willing to take the deficit challenge.

Less spending, more revenue: America cannot reduce the deficit sufficiently by relying on either spending cuts or revenue increases alone. Try-ing to lower the deficit without a concerted program of spending cuts and revenue increases would serious ly disrupt the economy and society. While additional revenue will be needed over the short and long terms, any revenue increases must be linked to tough spending restraints.

Broad support: Bringing down the deficit will take major and sometimes wrenching policy changes. These will be impossible to enact and apply without public understanding and support, and without a truly biparti-san coalition committed to regaining control of our economic destiny.

Political leaders should remember thet what they do next year on the deficit will either haunt or help them in their next campaign. They should now realistically assess the actions and compromises that will have to be made in early 1985 to eradicate current and future deficits.

The country is owed responsible leadership from the administration and Congress. Given thet, I believe that Americans have the political will to take effective and equitable steps to bring down the deficit and keep the budget under firm control.

The writer, chairman of the executive committee of Chemical Bank, has directed a study of the deficit issue for the Committee for Economic Development, a research group of business figures and university presidents. He con-tributed this to The New York Times. one can assume that the London press was on to something in accusing the British government of knuckling under to American pressure.

Apparently, Washington was embarrassed to find that no other West ern nation found U.S. unitation with UNESCO a sufficient reason for the grave decision to drop out. radical states that it says have molded UNESCO to their own purposes.

To the far right, UNESCO (and the United Nations generally) gives a nightmare vision of a world in which left-wing totalitarianism threatens the West's future while the democracies, weakened by liberalism, mildly protest. In a fund-raising letter the conservative Heritage Foundation, which has provided political instificawhich has provided political justifica-tion for the withdrawal decision, said UNESCO had fallen "under the con-trol of Communist and Third World 'diplomats' whose only standard of conduct is raw power Yet the fact is that UNESCO functions by consensus. America has ap-proved virtually every UNESCO project that critics now attack. And why shouldn't it approve, since UNESCO spends all but a fraction of its time and money on scientific research educational training, preservation of cultural monuments and the like?

But UNESCO's foes evidently do not want to improve it; they want to show it the back of their hand, Since Secretary of State George Shultz gave notice last December of U.S. intent to withdraw unless UNESCO tightened its budgetary and administra-tive practices and became less 'politicized," the organization has been sufficiently alarmed to take up re-form with a vengeance. Washington's conduct suggests that it stopped pay-ing attention. This apparent disdain sent a delegation to UNESCO's general conference equipped, it is widely believed, with instructions to express deep dissatisfaction and intimate a decision to withdraw. The delegation's chairman, Edmund P. Hennelly, returned with the unexpected news that the conference had been "among the least politicized and most acceptance with the conference had been to be a second constructive from the U.S. point of view in recent memory," that anti-Israel and pro-Soviet thetorie had been almost nonexistent and that UNESCO's much criticized director-general, Amadou Mahtar M'Bow, had proved flexible on budgetary and administrative matters. Two weeks later the United States informed UNESCO of its pullout plans.

UNESCO, including federal agen-cies, has come to its defense. Scientific bodies and scientists, especially, have rallied to UNESCO's side, arguing that no other agency can dupli-cate such global studies as the "man and the biosphere" program. Congressional hearings last March turned up little support for withdrawal.

by the U.S. General Accounting Office found that UNESCO is overstaffed, that its budget is poorly planned and that far too much power staffed that its budget is poorly planned and that rates to concentrated in the director-general's office. KUWAIT — Colonel Rifaat al-Assad, the strong-willed younger brother of President Hafez al-Assad of Syria who was sent abroad in June to live in political exile, has returned to Damascus accompanied by a tumultuous welcome of gunfire from his supporters. His return on Monday amounts to a political bombshell in Syrian politics and is certain to be interpreted there as a reaffirmation of the Syrian leader's support for his brother as his successor. The race for the presidency began prematurely a year ago when the 56-year-old president The jockeying for position led to a near full-scale military confrontation between Colonel Assad's 20,000-strong Defense Companies and a coalition of army and security forces opposed to him that turned Damascus into a checkerboard of rival armed groups ready to open fire on each other.

After several minor clashes in Damascus and other cities, President Assad finally prevailed upon his brother to leave the country to avoid the incipient power struggle from touching off a civil war.

When he left with his family and 40 bodyguards for Paris and then took up residence in armed Defense Companies under Syrian Army Geneva, his departure was interpreted as marking the apparent end to his political career.

President Assad took advantage of his brother's absence to put some units of the heavily

According to radio and other reports, Colonel Assad arrived shortly after the plane carrying Mr. Mitterrand touched down at the Damascus airport on Monday.

Meanwhile, as word filtered out to Damascus residents that Colonel Assad had returned, his supporters began firing their guns in the air to indicate their happiness. The events leading up to Colonel Assad's return are still wrapped in mystery, but it appears that he and his brother must have been having secret contacts to arrange for his political rehabilitation. Two weeks ago, the official Syrian gazette published a presidential decree stating that Colonel Assad was officially in charge of security matters, a job he should have had anyway by virtue of his official position as vice president for security and military affairs.

The annomicement indicated that some agreement had been reached and that only the inning of the return remained to be decided. When Colonel Assad left in June, there were reports circulating in Damascus that he had already then made a deal to leave Syria for a "cooling-off period" in return for which President Assad would support his succession bid. But most subsequent reports seemed to indicate that Colonel Assad had lost favor with the PARIS — The French Ministry of External Affairs called in the Australian ambassador in Paris on Wednesday after Foreign Minister Bill Hayden of Australia criticized the way France was handling current unrest in its South Pacific territory of New Caledonia.

Computer Said to Crack French Secrets

PARIS — A half-million "Minitel" computers that the French telephone company is issuing to homes and offices can be used to tap atomic energy secrets in a French government data bank, the satirical weekly newspa-per Le Canard Enchaîne reported Tuesday.

The "Minitel," which is available on a limited basis currently and will be become available to all subscribers within the next two years, will replace directories by providing telephone oumbers and eventually a vari-ety of information to homes and businesses, such as food and stock prices.

Le Canard said that a computer expert, using an office "Minitel," had obtained secress from the Atomic Energy Commissariat "without much effort." It said the data included top secret information about France's ouclear tests in the Pacific, the storing of nuclear waste, ouclear safety plans and de-tails of a project to build a new reactor. understand the processes that govern the behavior of atoms and molecules. The rules governing their behavior, known as quantum mechanics, have seemed to dety rational explanation. The effects are often bizarre.

For instance, measurements of processes on the atomic level appear to involve instantaneous communication, with widely separate particles such as electrons behaving in concert as if telling each other what to do.

That would violate one of the hasie tenets of physics: that no signal can travel faster than the speed of light. As noted by the French theorist Bernard d'Espagnat, sig-nals outracing light would lead to bizarre paradoxes of causality in which observers in some frames of the primary tool of today's scien-reference find that one event is tists because of its great success in

Now a group at the Applied kins University in Baltimore is again trying to show that there must be something awry about recent experiments supporting a form of instantaneous communication.

OR generations physicists a century ago, when the implica-tions of quantum mechanics were defined by Paul A. M. Dirac and others. Dr. Dirac, ranked by many physicists with Albert Einstein, died in Florida last month.

The experiments have focused on atomic processes that eject particles or light waves in opposite directions. There is evidence that. nntil measured, those particles have no definite properties. Yet the moment a measurement is made, they match one another in a manner difficult to explain unless there has been communication between conducted in France before the one starting at Johns Hopkins, seem to have shown that such communication is essentially instantaneous. Quantum mechanics has become 'caused' by another that has not yet predicting the interactions of atoms, molecules, elementary particles and radiation. Yet it has not explained why those interactions occur. The problem is not as remote as it may seem. Quantum mechanics plays a role in virtually all the chemical and physical reactions that control our lives and the world around us. Yet in many ways it perplexes electron. As noted by Dr. d'Espagnat in an article on quantum mechanics in Scientific American, tests show that the electron has no position until recorded. It appears "smeared out over a large region of space." Yet, when detected, it instantaneously takes on the properties of a particle with a precise location.

Likewise the twin ejected particles that simultaneously acquire a certain property, even when widely separated, seem to gain that property only when measured. It appears that features of the atomic world become real only when we

Behavior at the subatomic level suggesting instant communication has been seized upon by a few physicists to explain extrasensory perception and other claims of paranormal behavior. It is a baffling field. As Richard P. Feynman, the Nobel laureate physicist, has put it, "No one understands quantum mechanics." Its effects "are impossible, absolutely impossible" to explain based on human experience.

Quantum theory is frustrating

In 1935 Einstein and two young collaborators, Boris Podolsky and Nathan Rosen, proposed that the apparently instantaneous commumication between widely separated particles is caused by some as yet "hidden variables." In the case of apparently no matter how far apart

So far, most tests of this hypothesis have involved the ejection of there is nothing inside that neutron two photons, or light waves, in opthat determines the timing. That perfect, subatomic dance is accepted by Einstein. Although he found despite the fact that physical recognized the evidence for its vaccists believe the photons are not synchronized until the very moics: "An inner voice tells me it is ment they are examined. Until not yet the real thing." He did not then, like the smeared-out electron, believe, as he put it, that God plays they are believed to be in an uncertain state, wavering between alternate forms of polarization.

Only when measured does the polarization become real. Which form will be recorded is completely indeterminate. Yet when the polarizations of both photons are reandiscovered factors, referred to as corded, they are always correlated,

The tests so far, deriving from proposals made in 1964 by John S. Bell of CERN, the European nuclear research center near Geneva, have convinced theorists that, in such experiments, behavior of the twin particles has not been preprogrammed. The idea that there is some kind of normal communication between them is widely thought to have been ruled out in experiments conducted by Alain Aspect, Jean Dalibard and Gérard Roger at the Institute of Theoretical and Applied Optics in Orsay. near Paris.

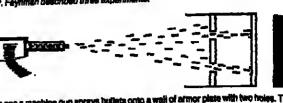

Their experiments have focused on pairs of photons emitted by energized calcium atoms. To prevent passage of a return signal at the critical moment of the experiment they have used a switching system that blocks the route every 10-billionths of a second.

At the Applied Physics Laboratory of Johns Hopkins University, James D. Franson and Kenneth A. Potocki still believe the French experiments have not ruled out some limit on the distance scale across which quantum effects occur. They are testing the dimensions of a pho-ton's wavelike effects. They believe they are already seeing "a signifi-cant decrease in the visibility" of these effects, "in apparent disagreement with the predictions of the quantum theory.

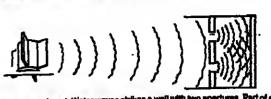

The preponderance of opinion, at the moment, seems to be on the side of that theory in all its multiple manifestations. According to Dr. Fritz Rohrlich, professor of theoretical physics at Syracuse University, the question is whether, on the scale of atoms, the world is controlled only by probabilities. Or, he asked rhetorically in the journal Science, is there something deterministie "hidden underneath" the observed phenomena, of which quantum dynamics "is some sort of average?

The rules of physics may block any measurment of such an underlying effect, if one existed. The current thinking is that any attempt to measure it would so alter the situation that the effect would vanish.

Algae That Can 'See'

By Boyce Rensberger WASHINGTON — Algae have cyes.

Not exactly the way human beings have eyes, but, as a team of scientists discovered, there is a common one-celled alga with a visual system that works much like. the human eye's retina to convert light into electrical signals that govern the organism's behavior.

It had long been known that the alga, a pond-dwelling species called Chlamydomonas, has a light-sensitive "eyespot." The new discovery is that the eyespot uses the same light-sensitive chemical - a visual pigment called rhodopsin — that is in the retinas of the eyes of animals, including humans. Although it is a green plant, Chlamydomonas has two threadlike algae quickly acquired the ability flagella that lash about to pull it to swim to optimal light levels. through the water much like a human swimmer doing the breaststroke. The organism senses the amount of light coming through the water and steers itself up or down to find the optimal level of light needed for photosynthesis, the solar-powered process that all green plants use to manufacture sugar. Because aleae are among the earliest forms of life to appear on Earth, the discovery suggests that rhodopsin was "invented" quite early in the process of evolution. The eyes of higher organisms simply are more versatile ways of making use of rhodopsin's remarkable ability to produce an electrical sig-nal when struck by light.

The discovery was made by Kenneth W. Foster, now at Syracuse University, and a team of six others at Columbia University and the City University of New York.

Dr. Foster established the existence of rhodopsin in the alga hy doing experiments with a special strain of blind Chlamydomonas

Dr. Foster had reason to believe that the algae were blind because a mutation rendered them unable to manufacture an essential component of the rhodopsin molecule, called retinal. This is the same substance, derived from vitamin A, whose absence in the diet can cause blindness in human beings. When retinal was added to the water, the

Man-Made Comet to Be Launched

LOS ANGELES (AP) - The first man-made comet, part of a project to study how solar wind interacts with Earth's magnetic field, will be launched on Christmas Day:

The comet, part of a $78-million, three-nation effort, should be visible to the naked eye west of a line running from Chicago south to the southern tip of Texas, although it will not be visible where the sun has risen, said Paul Bernhardt, in charge of ground observations at Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico. It also will be visible from southwestern Canada, Hawaii and perhaps Tahiti. The comet is part of a research program shared by the United States, Britain and West Germany. Three satellites, one from each nation, were launched in connection with the project on 16 from Kennedy Space

Light Pulses Are Said to Be Shortest

NEW YORK (NYT) - Scientists at International Business Machines Corp. have generated light pulses so short that as many of them could be crowded into a single second as there are seconds in 30 million years.

They are said to be the shortest ever produced, and they should have a variety of applications in observing high-speed reactions of molecules, atoms and electrons. The light pulses should, like the motion-stopping flashes of a strobe light, reveal successive steps in such events.

Each flash lasts 12 "femtoseconds," one such unit of time being one thousandth of a millionth of a millionth of a second. The flash is produced by "compressing" 100 femtosecond pulses from a dye laser. Drug Treats Premenstrual Syndrome

BOSTON (AP) — A drug that shuts off sex hormone production by the ovaries appears to be the first effective treatment for premenstrual syndrome, researchers say. Despite the risk of possible side effects, researchers believe some women may be willing to take the drug to escape the mood swings and other disruptive consequences of the monthly cycle. Its effects are reversible. No one knows the drug's long-term effects, but drawbacks would probably include symptoms of menopause, such as brittle bones and increased risk of uterine cancer.

Dr. Ken N. Muse, who directed a study on the drug at the University of California in San Diego, said it should be used only in carefully controlled experiments and not prescribed routinely.

Chicken Pox, Shingles Virus Identical

BOSTON (AP) — The long-held belief that chicken pox and shingles result from a single type of virus has been proved for the first time in a study of microbe genes.

"It sort of puts icing on the cake in terms of various observations over the past 100 years," said Dr. Stephen E. Straus. "Everyone believes that shingles represents reactivation of chicken pox infections."

Most people get chicken pox during early childhood, but they don't have shingles until middle age or beyond. After the chicken pox rash clears up, the varicella-zoster virus hides in nerve cells for decades. It may suddenly reactivate, causing a painful shingles eruption.

The problem has been isolating both the chicken pox virus and the shingles virus from the same person so they can be compared. Researchers at the National Institutes of Health recovered samples of the chicken pox virus from a 9-year-old boy. Three months later, he got shingles, and they removed virus again. Genetic analysis showed that thet were caused

U.S. Reports Rise in Cancer Survival WASHINGTON (LAT) — More than half of all patients diagnosed as having cancer now are "potentially curable," and 49 percent of those whose cancer was discovered between 1976 and 1981 are expected to survive at least five years, the National Cancer Institute reported.

The institute, in its annual report on five-year cancer survival rates, said the latest figures show that the "improvement continues" compared with last year's reported rate of 48-percent survival for patients diagnosed from 1973 through 1980.

The institute called this year's increased rates "statistically significant" for colon, lung, prostate and testicular cancers, as well as for melanoma - a sometimes fatal skin cancer - and Hodgkin's disease. The most "striking" increase in survival, the report said, has occurred among children. Overall, children diagnosed between 1960 and 1963 had a fiveyear survival rate of only 28 percent, it said, contrasted with a 60 percent rate for the 1976-81 period.

Selected High-Tech Issues A Good Bet, Analysts Say

By EDWARD ROHRBACH

International Herald Tribune AN FRANCISCO - It used to be that stock analysts and investors in the high-technology companies that abound in the Silicon Valley and elsewhere in the San Francisco area never met a stock they didn't like. But a year-and-ahalf ago the magic began to fade and now you don't invite high tech and Wall Street to the same party anymore.

"It's bizarre to look at the charts and see how many of these stocks peaked in the $30 to $40 range in June of 1983, then plunged to about $5 a share before finally bottoming out for something like an 85 percent loss," observed Frank Husic, president of Alliance Technology Fund. Alliance, based io San Francisco, was the hottest per-former of any mutual fund in the bull market that exploded from Aug. 12, 1982, through June 16, 1983, It soared 213 percent. Since then, the $140million fuod (down from $180-million at the peak) has fallen off 30 percent.

Nevertheless, Mr. Husie thinks the time is right for investors to get back into high-technology stocks, with the proviso that it "depends on which group." For stocks still "alive" and prepared to "exert leadership," he believes there's a "real chance of making your money back" without much risk of further price deteriora-

"But nobody believes you that it's the bottom," be said. "Though the fact people have such little faith now is exactly what bottoms are all about." "Since hitting their peak it's been a real sorting out, the wheat from the chaff," he added. "This process has gone a long way."

R. Husic, reminded that investors have heard several times before that high-tech stocks were poised to re-bound, contended that what is different now is Federal Reserve policy, "There's been the lowering of the discount rate and bonds have railied as the Fed's been lately creating a loose and liquid environment. That's going to help the overall market and high-beta technology stocks will outperform the street."

Emphasizing that a resurgence by the group will be selective, Mr. Husic began by naming the groups he likes the least. At the top of the list are microcompoters, the victims of a "profitless prosperity," he said, where "a lot of PC units are being sold but nobody's making any money."

Neither does he favor investment in suppliers to these companies, oamely the disk drive makers and those in the controller business. However, it's probably "too late to sell" these stocks and he advises investors to "play the bounce" before dumping

Semiconductor stocks and related issues, which have been under heavy selling pressure the past month, should also be avoided, he warned. "The numbers are going down; there's a lot of fear out there." Yet he thinks earnings estimates are being shaved too much and forecasts that the stocks will probably be a buy "sometime the first half of 1985."

On the positive side, his favorite group is the one that includes computer-aided design and manufacturing stocks, along with those in computer-aided engineering. What he likes about these companies is how quick a payoff customers get from their products, which keeps up the demand and pricing.

Aerospace, "driven by the certainty of earnings from defense spending," is next on Alliance's buy list, with the largest companies favored. Next-best-liked are software vendors, where "carnstarting to turn around." He mentioned the insurance field but did out want to be specific about the stocks because, as with other selections, the fund is still buying them.

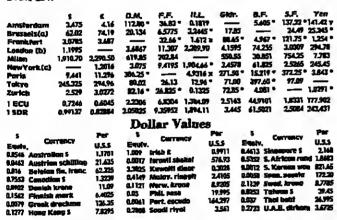

Voice-data communications is another attractive field, Mr. Husic said, with earnings estimates for the group starting to go up after several slow quarters. He said Alliance is also starting to look at the medical-technology area, especially companies that had "temporary problems but are regrouping."

Bullish sentiment towards high technology is also back at San

Fiscal Problems Threaten to Derail Japan's Highly Prized Train System

By Susan Chira New York Times Service

TOKYO - Japan's rail system, long a symbol of efficiency and technological progress, has be-come a target of lond and persistent accusations about financial mismanagement, labor strife and public-sector featherbedding.

The rail system, to be sure, still provides exem-plary service. The trains are clean; the doors work. Technologically, they are state of the art. They are always on time. They carry seven billion passengers a year, to almost every corner of the country.

But the company that keeps them going, Japan Nadonal Railways, has accumulated a debt so large that every day of operation plunges it a further $25 million into the red.

JNR's fmancial quandary is so severe that it has stirred a national debate about the company's future. Government and private groups have stud-ied it. Critics have called for its dissolution. Labor leaders have threatened strikes. The public is puzzled and angry.

Company officials, private business people and labor leaders agree on the causes of the problem: poliocal interference, entrenched bureaucracy, the decline of railroad traffic, ambitious construction projects, poor labor-management relations and legal restrictions that prevent the railroad from receiving tax breaks or diversifying into other busi-

But they differ on solutions - whether to break up the company and selt off its unprofitable lines, whether large layoffs are occessary, whether to change the fare structure and whether to allow the company to diversify into other businesses.

The system's difficuldes raise some of the same sensitive issues as the plight of public transporta-tion in many other cities. How should the desire to provide public transportation be balanced against fiscal accountability? How should laid-off workers be provided for in a society that seemed to promise them job security?

The history of the railroad suggests, as well, how the highly touted Japanese principles of labor harmony, worker dedication, long-term planning and lifetime employment break down here, just as they do elsewhere.

In 1983, the operating loss of the railway was equivalent to $7.5 billion — 26 percent wider than the previous year. Its operating revenue was $13.8 billion, relatively unchanged from the previous year. And its expenses of $21.3 billion, which include soaring pension costs and interest payments, rose 8 percent.

Interest payments on the $83 billion debt were $5.4 billion last year, nearly half the system's Operating revenue.

The railroad company's debt has been accumulating for years, but only recently has its size stirred public outcry. Last year, about $299 million of the deficit was paid by the government, from public pension funds and postal savings accounts commonly used here to finance government pro-

EC Declares It Will Retaliate on U.S. Steel Ban

By Paul Lewis

New York Times Service PARIS — The European Com-munity said Wednesday that it will retaliate against President Ronald Rengan's decision to ban imports of European steel pipe for the rest of this year, denouncing the U.S. move as protectionist and discriminatory.

The EC countries abrogated the accord under which they originally agreed to restrict themselves to 5.9 percent of the U.S. steel pipe and tube market this year. They plan now to seek compensation through the General Agreement on Tarrifs and Trade for the loss of trade by cutting back imports of U.S. goods.

[Etienne Davignon, the EC in-dustry commission, said Wednes-day in Brussels that a list of possi-ble targets for EC retaliation was being drawn up and would be submitted to the trading bloc's governing Council of Ministers soon, the Associated Press reported.

That move was followed by release of a statement in Bonn from the West German Economics Minister's office saying West Germany "is ready to negotiate, but considers countermeasures by the Euro-

Mitsubishi, Ford Reach Accord to Make Satellites

TOKYO — Mitsubishi
Corp., a large Japanese trading company, and its Mitsubishi Electric Corp. affiliate have agreed to make and sell jointly lecommunications satellites with Ford Aerospace & Communications Corp., a unit of Ford Motor Co. of the United States, a Missubish Electric spokesman said Wednesday.

Both companies are to build satellites, but Mitsubishi Electric will be largely responsible for producing half-ton models while Ford produces one-ton models, the spokesman said.

The spokesman said the three companies will jointly handle overseas marketing, but Mitsu-bishi Cosp. will sell the satellites

The arrangement is aimed mainly at breaking into the Japanese domestie market for satellites following the expected denationalization of the telecommunications industry next

These lines employ fewer people than the JNR and charge lower fares for train rides that run almost parallel to JNR tracks. One Japaese executive who was apartmenthunting in Tokyo recently said he based his decision in part on whether he would have to ride the JNR or a private line to work.

The railroad company's problems began in the mid-1960s as railroads began losing passengers to cars and planes. Yet JNR neither cut its staff nor scaled down its operations.

For that, all sides lay the blame on political pressure. Members of Parliament won construction of lines in remote rural areas with few passengers. And with voter-passengers in mind, politicians were reluctant to allow the JNR to raise fares

The Perfect Executive Folder

Exclusively designed for the International Herald Tribune by Leathersmith of London in superb, fine-grained leather

The most efficient of all possible solutions for organizing the many papers you need—and collect—at meetings, conferences, on calls and appointments, on business trips.

The ideal business gift for an associate, a family member or yourself.

Each folder is fastioned in fine silk-grain black leather, fully lined in blue silk, with magnetic snap closing. Folder measures a generous 66×33 cm. $(26 \times 13 \text{ in.})$ open, and $26 \times 33 \text{ cm.}$ $(10 \times 13 \text{ in.})$ closed. Four gilt metal corners. Personalized with three initials embossed in gold.

 Inside left, two large, practical pockets for letters and papers, plus two smaller pockets for visiting cards.

In center position a 50-sheet blue paper A-4 pad bound in matching black leather. Under the pad, more storage space for papers and documents.
At right, a space-age thin, solar powered calculate that fits in its paper and the page that the product of the fits.

lator that fits in its own pocket; two pockets for credit cards; an aide-memoire. Two full-length pockets ideal for airplane tickets, passport, brochures, etc. Plus a gilt-metal pencil in a sleek leather holder.

The perfect practical gift for the businessman or woman, created for us by Leathersmith of London, known internationally for elegant styling and craftmanship since 1839.

France, Russia, and the Coming of the

AT a glance, it might seem a quaint and dusty Corner of history that George F. Kennan is exploring in his 16th and latest book, "The Fateful Alliance: France, Russia, and the Coming of the First World War," which concentrates on certain events in diplomacy in the years 1890 through 1894.

But a moment's reflection reminds us that Russia's diplomatic posture before World War I was inextricably wound up with its entrance into that war, which in turn was vitally connected to the success of the 1917 Bolshevik revolution. In short, we are

ing the characters of his drama, then telling a complex yet digestible story whose unfolding ap-pears to depend on their behavior. In a nutshell: With the retirement of its chancellor, Otto von Bismarck, in 1890, Germany saw no need to renew a bilateral pact with Russia known as the Reinsurance

Treaty.

This left Russia isolated, and given its nervous-ness in the face of the Triple Alliance among Germany, Austria-Hungary and Italy, it turned to France, which also stood in isolation, as a possible ally, There followed the diplomatic maneuverings that eventually resulted in the Franco-Russian Alliance of 1893 - maneuverings that seem mainly to

BOOKS

This, of course, is what he had in mind in writing "The Fateful Alliance," the second part of a three-volume study, that began in 1979 under the title "The Decline of Bismarck's European Order" and is scheduled to continue with the events from 1894 to have been characterized by deceit, misunderstanding, misjudgment, short-sightedness, double-deal-ing, scandal, bad luck and incompetence. Kennan is not much entertained by his tale, although he does pause now and then to divert the reader with some of the color and spectacle of the events he is describing. At every opportune moment, he pauses to underline the story's relevance to the future — the tendency of nations to perceive their rivals' defensive moves as offensive, the paranoid fantasies that sprang up wherever there was the least soil for them to take root, and, most emphatically, the shift in the concept of war from one of limited and defined objectives to all-out destroc-

Kennan writes diplomatic history with the charm and skill of an old-fashioned novelist, first introduc-

"Whence came this change?" he asks in his epilogue, and singles out in reply two prominent fac-tors — first, "the combined effect of industrializa-tion, population growth, and increased military specialization" that arose in the 19th century, and second, "the growing power — the stormy, sweeping, unwithstandable power — of modern nationalism over the minds and emotions of men."

Yet just as influential in his story is the fact of autocracy, the power of a single ruler, the sick and secretive Czar Alexander III, to affect all posterity with his increasingly irrational behavior. The gener-als may have had their way in "The Fateful Alliance" but not without the autocrat. So if there is a paramount lesson to be learned here, it is hardly that we need to do away with autocracies.

Still, this is only a quibble. The trouble with Santayana's remark about the doom of those who forget the past is that history never repeats itself precisely. The useful lesson to be drawn from Kennan's history is that it was mere men and women—not mysterious, inexorable historical forces—that brought us to our present state. That may not do us much good, but it is somehow inspiriting. At least, it allows us to draw some relief from the dismaying story that Kennan tells.

IMF Said Likely to Approve

WASHINGTON - The International Monetary Fund is expected on Nov. 9 to approve the third year of a three-year economic program for Brazil, monetary sources said Friday.

Union Bectric

The program approval, freeing $1.9 billion in new funding for Brazil, already has been supported by the IMF's managing director, Jacques de Larosière, the sources said. The final decision rests with the IMF's executive board, which must agree that Brazil is continuing to take the austerity measures needed to deal with its nearly $100 billion in foreign debt.

The debt discussions, which are expected to conclude in January, had hinged on the IMF's approva of the short-term economic goals being proposed in Brazil's letter of intent presented to IMF officials earlier this year.

Sources said it was unlikely the program will run into any major problems at the discussions by the executive board, which represents the IMF's 148-member countries.

WAY FORM — The Securities around foreign bank secrecy laws around foreign bank secrecy laws place relatively quickly as many of the New York Stock Exchange's straint over the whole market when the object is to detect one problem in a million."

The SEC's enforcement director, securities investors concealing their or brokerage abroad would give up identity behind foreign secrecy the right to prevent disclosure of identity behind foreign secrecy laws has received a hostile recepties industry. Many industry analysts said that by conduct legislation could distort the world securities markets by provoking a mass defection of U.S. securities investors to other seas markets to preserve anonyminformation to U.S. authorities.

The chairman of the Securities Industry Association's international committee, John W. Hyland congressional approval of waiver said, "We fear that bona fide investory conduct legislation could distort tors, as well as disreputable ones, will be forced away from the U.S. securities market." At present, waiver by conduct is

An SEC commissioner, Aulana Peters, said: "Regulation has not kept bona fide investors out of the market until now and this particular concept is not so onerous that it would chase these people away."

EUROPEAN GENERAL MANAGER

One of our clients is a fast growing US HIGH TECH multinational producing portable computers and custom application software with subsidiaries and tributors throughout Europe.

This organisation manufactures portable computers in the U.S. The sales are generated through subsidiaries and distributors in Europe. The managerial style of the company is informal, which is normal for the 'high tech' industry, but very lough when it comes to achieving the projected sales levels. The candidate (M/F) we are looking for must be according to the projected sales levels. The candidate (M/F) we are looking for must be a very dynamic, entrepreneurial type of top manager. For example, the right candidate could be a European VP of a small 'high tech' company who is looking for a new challenge. Another possibility is an European marketing manager who is looking for broader responsibility. All applicants must have a proven and excellent record of success. A person who has led a company to significant growth in market share and profit could be the most interesting candidate for this position.

Duties and responsibilities

These will include:
- overall responsibility for all the activities of the company in Europe

COLLECTED STORIES

By Gabriel Garcia Marquez. Translated from the Spanish by Gregory Rabassa and S. J. Bernstein. 312 pp. $16.95 Harper & Row. 10 East 53d Street, New York, N. Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Jonathan Yardley

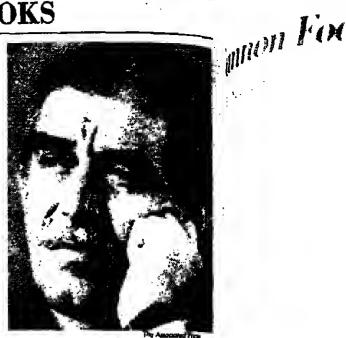

HESE are, as the title says, the "Collected 1 Stories" of Gabriel Garcia Marquez, but they are short by two notable omissions of being the complete stories. They are drawn from the three volumes of stories ("No One Writes to the Colonel," "Leaf Storm," and "Innocent Erendira"), but they are incompletely drawn; the otle stories of the first two collections are not included in this volume because the author regards them as novellas. The absence of "No One Writes to the Colooel" and "Leaf Storm" renders the "Collected Stories" a largely useless, if most attractive,

The one justification for the collection is that the book reprints the stories in the order in which they were first published in Spanish although, again, whatever benefits the reader derives from this are significantly diminished by the omission of the two pivotal tales. Published chronologically, the stories make even clearer for American readers that Garcia Marquez made an almost unimaginable leap from his apprenticework in the 1940s and '50s to the unblemished mastery of "One Hundred Years of Solitude." It requires the skills of a literary archaeologist to locate the roots of that novel in the first 11 stories herein, assembled in a section called "Eyes of a Blue Dog."

The relationship of those stories to "One Hundred Years" and the other work that has followed it is suggested only in an occasional glimmer. A woman's private demons are described as coming "from the heart of her fa-ther, who had fed them painfully during his nights of desperate solitude." For the most part, though, these stories contrast starkly with the author's mature work. There is in them little of the expberant mixture of the fantastic and the literal that oow characterizes Garcia Marquez's work. Rather, they tend to be mo-rose, interior stories — though there's precious little story to any of them - that muse gloomily about death. The one hint they give of work to come is their pervasive sense of twinning: mirrors, double images, actual twins are all employed to convey that sense of death in life, life in death, that pervades the oovels and later

It's at this point in Garcia Marquez's career that "No One Writes to the Colonel," originally published in Spanish in 1961, assumes great importance. In it the author moves away from his preoccupation with death and toward a more energetic encounter with life; an early reference is made to Macondo, the town that subsequently became his equivalent of Faulk-ner's Yoknapatawpha County, and also to Col-ouel Aureliano Buendia, the larger-than-life figure who appears over and again in the major work; and hints are given of the interest in military power that eventually produced "The Autumn of the Patriarch." But the reader of

"Collected Stories," of course, misses all of Instead, in a second section of 10 stories called "Big Mama's Funeral," he finds himself quite suddenly in fictional territory that he knows well from the novels. Macondo is here, and Aureliano Buendia, and the astonishing magic that makes the mature work as distincove as any in the world. In a story such as "One Day After Saturday," we know at once where we are. Here, for example, is "His reverence, Anthony Isabel of the Holy Sacrament of the Altar Castaneda y Montero, the bland parish priest who, at the age of 94, assured people that he had seen the devil on three occasions."

"He liked to wander through metaphysical obstacle courses. That was what he was doing when he used to sit in the bedroom every morning, with the door ajar, his eyes closed and his muscles tensed. However, he himself did not realize that he had become so subtle in his thinking that for at least three years in his meditative moments he was oo longer thinking about anything."

Several of these stories are, as one would expect from Garcia Marquez, quite splendid; "Innocent Erendira," "One of These Days," "There Are No Thieves in This Town," "Bathazar's Marvelous Afternoon," "One Day After Saturday," "Death Constant Beyood Love," Inescapably, though, by contrast with the two great oovels and even with the more slender one, "Chronicle of a Death Foretold," they seem minor and tentative. Whether fairly or not, one tends to read them less for their own intrinsic virtues than for what they show us about the roots of the masterpieces; the delight we feel upon a chance and unexpected encounter with the name of Aureliano Buendia, or upon hearing a man speak of "the sign of solitude," is the delight of fioding ourselves suddenly back in a landscape we love. They are very good stories, and the hint of greatness is in them, but only in the novels is it fully realized.

The man who had been his second asked him wby he was taking the chance of being hurt for so little money. Rushing so he wouldn't miss next morning's shift at the mill, Garnett turned; without a smile or hesitation, he replied,

"Christmastime, man." When hoxers are known to lose more often than they win they become useful only as "opponents." Often they are called less flattering names, but without them the sport, according to those who understand it best, could not exist. "This is boxing as it has been known since the beginning of time," says Hank Kaplan, a boxing historian. "Ever since the dawning somebody discovered that the way to build a fighter up was in get him someone he can beat up.

States with boxing commissions - most have them, some do not try to keep boxers from lighting and losing too often. Since 1980, New York has required boxers to carry "passports" documenting their victories, losses and suspensions. New Jersey and Pennsylvamia have similar systems.

The three states supply informa tion in one another on suspended fighters. In New Jersey, a fighter who has been knocked out is suspended for 60 days. In New York the suspension is for 90 days. In Pennsylvania the commission has suspended a boxer for 90 days for a "very poor showing."

But transgressions exist. Although New York will revoke the licenses of fighters who have been knocked out six times, enforcement is difficult. They change their names," Torres says.

Torres recalls how his manager, Cus D'Amato, was judicious in selecting the men he fought. In his first fight he knocked out Gene badly and quickly it seems on purpose. Sometimes it is; often it isn't. "He was supposed in get hit on the chin and he was supposed in fall," says Larry Kent, a Miami trainer for many years, recalling a poorly executed dive he once ob-served. "Every time he fell he didn't get hit. The referee looked at him and said, 'Get up, you burn, you didn't get hit.'

he looked up and said, 'Don't tell against Joe Vellmure, who bear him me I didn't get hit. Start count-twice before.

Davis did not think he was an opponent for a long time. He fought a lot and lost almost every time but did not question his manager's plan, he says, because he did nnt think it a fighter's right. He fought the same man twice in Baltimore in his first two lights and, after the second loss, fought in New York three days later and then again, against the same man, two days afterward.

He paid bills with his first paycheck. Then he bought himself a present. "I think I bought me a suit on a store on 14th Street," he says. "I also bought a hat to go with it, a big. Brown, born in New York, is a graduate of Stanford University

Paris arrondissements and the terminal buildings of the Charles de Gaulle Airport for a gun battle.

Filmmaker Brown: "I got all the good shows."

A private bank has had to double for the U.S. consulate as tight security made it impossible to film in the real one. The unit has recruited its own Marine guards

New York is Brown's residence, but he is in Hollywood monthly and when the European interludes of "Target" are finished in late December or early January, there will be additional filming in Dallas.

Aside from his expertise in realizing his productions, Brown is trusted and valued in Hollywood as "an idea man." He is widely read and is a shrewd student of the public pulse. Unlike many of his rivals, he believes audiences tire quickly of repetitions and imitations and avoids set formulas, as the variety of his productions

He has in mind a film biogra-phy of the picturesque playboy, Wilson Mizner, of an affluent San Francisco family, who went to Alaska in the Gold Rush of 1897, one of the first Americans on the Klondike. Mizner later became a gambler and entertainer who belonged to the group of Jack London, Rex Beach, Robert

W. Service and Sid Grauman. "My first thought was to restrict the scenario to the Alaska setting with Mizner as a brash, unscrupulous daredevil," Brown said. "But the rest of his life was equally colorful. He married the widow of C. T. Yerkes, the Chicago traction magnate. 'I owned everything on wheels in Chicago.'

Yerkes bragged. He was 30 and she was 70. He couldn't take it for long and went to a lawyer to prepare a divorce. 'On what grounds? the lawyer asked. 'Isn't marriage snfficient?' Mizner came back.

"He was the manager of the great middle-weight boxer, Stan-ley Ketchell, who was shot dead over a farmhand's girl. 'Count 10 over him and he'll get up,' Mizner ordered. Mizner was a successful Broadway playwright, an art dealer with a gallery of replicas of famous paintings. He crossed the Atlantic again and again winning fortunes at cards. The warning 'Don't play cards with strangers' fitted him. He never lost. He, too, came to Hollywood at the end of his life and rewrote his melodramas as film scripts. It's quite a story, but just how to get its richness on the screen is a problem I'll face when I really begin to tackle the material."

That is Brown's target for to-

A $1.7-Million Forfeit

Lottery prize became government guess. property because a year had expired since the winning ticket was sold on Nov. 26, 1983. The award actually amounts to $731,000 in cash, but it would have grown to $1.7 million if it had collected interest while being distributed to a winner in installments over 20 years, Quinn said. The money will be used for state aid to education. The state has kept $16 million in unclaimed winnings in seven years. The state is still looking for winners of two other Lotto prizes of more than $1 million, Quinn said. One ticket, worth $1.67 million, was sold March 21 in Nassau County, and a ticket worth $1.1 million was sold June 30 in Westchester Coun-

Eva Wagner-Pasquier, the great-granddaughter of the composer Richard Wagner, has been named to the new post of opera director at London's Royal Opera House, Covent Garden. She will start work in January under the overall direction of the music director, Bernard Haitink, when he takes over from Sir Colin Davis. Wagner-Pasquier was born in Bayreuth and became personal assistant to her father, Wolfgang Wagner, for nine Bayreuth festivals, involving herself in administration, casting and auditions. She has worked at several other European opera houses, including Covent Garden, and has been head of the artistic department at Unitel Film and Television Productions since 1973.

П René Arend had worked in exclusive restaurants in Europe and Chicago and didn't think of himself as a McChef when Ray Kroe, the founder of McDonald's, tried to hire him. "I told him, 'I am not a hamburger man, "Arend said, "I am a chef. We are completely different." But after 10 years, Arend, a native of Luxembourg, quit his job at Chicago's Whitehall Club in 1976 and began experimenting in ... the McDonald's kitchen. He came up with "poulet a la nugget," which the world now knows as Chicken McNugget, "My colleagues could not believe that I would go to fast
